Did you know?

This project inventories existing oral histories to create various opportunities for these stories to be shared with our team, partners and the community.

This project works in collaboration with interpretive teams at War in the Pacific National Historical Park on Guam and American Memorial Park in Saipan to embrace all American stories and make them accessible.

The Power of Truth-telling

Since the 1980s the NPS has conducted interviews from civilians and military service people recounting their WWII experience. Through this Fellowship we are working to bring to light these powerful truth-tellings.

Listening to these stories can lead to a greater understanding of other's perspectives in order to commit to healing the wounds of history.

Dr. Craig proposes to answer scholarly questions through collections-based research with heart-centered and relational practices, which works as a form of archaeological excavation.

The methods of research includes searching with mentors/ghosts/spirits/colleagues through contents of boxes and old catalogues that are found deep in repositories.
